STORY

The movie is a comedy with satire on recession. The story revolves around a Non-resident-Indian (NRI), Om Shashtri, who lived the American dream and made it big in the US. Then one day, as it happened in America, US economy went into recession and overnight big businesses, banks, and financial institutions crashed. This almost drove Om to bankruptcy. Having lost all his wealth, his last possession – his home was also going to be taken away by the banks for defaulted mortgage payments. He decides to go to India to sell off his ancestral property to pay off his house in the US. As the Indian real-estate industry had been undergoing a boom, Om thought it would fetch a good price. When he lands in India, he finds himself at odds with the real-estate market and is unable to sell his property. At the same time, some local gangsters, also badly hit by recession, kidnap him thinking that he must be loaded with money being an NRI from America. Their hopes come crashing down when they find out that Om is broke as well. After this, it is Om's hillarious journey through the clutches of various gangsters and how he escapes from them while making money for not only himself but also the starved gangsters – in this cash strapped economy. The movie has undercurrents of the local political and social infrastructure that breeds and legitimizes corruption – all done in a non-intrusive and comical fashion.
